Research Experience

Institute of Population and Labor Economics, CASS

Jan 2025 – Present

Research Assistant, Adviser: Prof. Duo Xu

- Built a panel dataset (2019–2024) by manually collecting platform launch dates for 214 hospitals and processing 420,000+ consultation records.
- Applied Staggered DiD models to evaluate behavioral shifts. Revealed a divergence: lower-title doctors were more likely to exit the platform, retained low-title doctors increased their active engagement but gained less volume, validating an exacerbated "Matthew Effect" in the platform.
- Conducted semi-structured interviews to assess the effectiveness of hospital HR incentives. Identified that non-mandatory financial rewards successfully recalled junior and average-performing doctors, but failed to incentivize "star employees" who possessed high bargaining power.

Amsterdam Business School, University of Amsterdam (Remote)

Jan 2025–Jul 2025

Research Assistant, Adviser: Prof. Shuai Yuan

- Project 1: Verified and coded robustness checks for 500 top management journal papers (AMJ, ASQ, etc.) to improve accuracy of LLM-assisted systematic review.
- Project 2: Led full data analysis using random forest and the VIMP method - Algorithm-agnostic variable importance (Williamson et al., JASA, 2021) to assess the relative importance of employment conditions across worker types.
- Initial results: direct hires' performance driven by development opportunities; agency workers' performance driven by job security and basic working conditions.
